Women’s Fund offering up to $250K in grants

SPRINGFIELD — The Women’s Fund of Western Massachusetts is offering up to $250,000 in grants for organizations that serve women and girls in Berkshire, Franklin, Hampden and Hampshire counties.

“Being able to make grant funding available at this time is critical as we are in a unique position to support our communities in meeting urgent unmet needs,” Nicole Young, community investments manager, said in a Women’s Fund press release. “Our board is committed to investing in the organizations serving women and girls who are equally as dedicated to addressing these disparities.”

The Women’s Fund is considering renewing the agreements made with organizations that received funding through the Fund for Me Too Movement and Allies (the #MeToo Fund) in 2020. According to the release, these programs deliver services and support across the four counties for prevention and intervention of sexual-based violence. Last year’s recipients include the Root Studio in Turners Falls and The Salasin Project in Greenfield. Funding from these renewal grants will total $50,000.

Additionally, the organization will disperse at least $100,000 for programs providing economic aid to women and families. Potential recipients were vetted through an interview process, with awards being determined based on immediate need. Award recipients will be announced soon, according to the release.

The Young Women’s Initiative of the Women’s Fund of Western Massachusetts seeks to distribute $15,000 in grants to Springfield-based organizations whose programs address safety and anti-violence; economic security and prosperity; or leadership and visibility. And lastly, the Women’s Fund will award grants totaling at least $70,000 through a general request for proposals process, the release states.

Women and girl-serving organizations based in Berkshire, Franklin, Hampden and Hampshire counties whose work aligns with one of Women’s Fund’s following pillars of work may apply: economic security; parity in positions of power and leadership and; and freedom from violence, harassment and abuse. The application process will start with a letter of intent due by Feb. 28, with final decisions announced by June.

More detailed information, including a grant timeline, letter of intent criteria and submission guidelines, is available at mywomensfund.org.

COVID-19 Response Fund provides $1.3M in grants

SPRINGFIELD — The Community Foundation of Western Massachusetts has awarded $1.3 million in new grants to support programs providing eviction prevention, mental health and food insecurity assistance to those impacted by the COVID-19 pandemic. The grants are from the COVID-19 Response Fund for the Pioneer Valley, which to date has awarded $10.2 million to 182 organizations in Hampden, Hampshire and Franklin counties.

According to a Community Foundation of Western Massachusetts press release, more than 700 donors — including individuals, foundations, businesses and $4.4 million from the statewide Massachusetts COVID-19 Relief Fund — have contributed to the foundation’s COVID-19 Response Fund. Donations can be made at community-foundation.org/donate-now.

“Our grant making continues to evolve to meet the demands placed on the social infrastructure of our region as a result of the pandemic,” said Katie Zobel, president and CEO of the Community Foundation of Western Massachusetts. “More people are struggling to stay in their homes as a result of the devastating consequences of COVID-19 on our economy. Food insecurity continues to plague the region and there is a marked increase in individuals and families needing behavioral health care services. This latest round is aimed at these critical areas of need.”

The Franklin County-based organizations that received funding in the new round of grants are: Community Action Pioneer Valley (Greenfield); Community Health Center of Franklin County (Greenfield); Franklin Area Survival Center (Turners Falls); Franklin County Community Meals Program (Greenfield); Franklin County Regional Housing & Redevelopment Authority (Turners Falls); Good Neighbors Food Pantry (Charlemont); Hill-town Churches Food Pantry (Ashfield); LifePath (Greenfield); Root Studio (Turners Falls); Seeds of Solidarity Education Center (Orange); Stone Soup Café (Greenfield); Salvation Army — Greenfield corps; and Wendell Good Neighbors. Numerous other organizations that are not based in Franklin County but provide services to its residents also received grant funding.

to launch their rebranding last summer with a block party, but the COVID-19 pandemic threw all plans out the window.

“It pretty much dismantled our timeline,” Darren said.

Employees were laid off or reduced to part-time and will be rehired when the health crisis is in the rearview mirror.

The brothers said they are not discontinuing any blends, but might rename some.

The company, which operates out of the industrial park in Greenfield, is known for air roasting, the process of taking the coffee bean’s outer husk out of the roast as it’s cooking. This, they said, produces healthier, cleaner, smoother beans. With its wavy design, the guitar pick logo pays homage to this process.

The backs of the bags read, “LIFE BREWED LOUD,” which the brothers said was chosen for a reason.

“You’re not just drinking, you’re having an experience with our coffee because it’s so unique,” Sean said.

Lenox

emphasizing the vital work of the town's DPW, as well as the town's police and the Berkshire County Sheriff's Office.

"It was a real team effort, but I give you a lot of credit for putting together a great program," Mitts told Nacht in support of the funding-increase proposal. "I don't think they're asking for the moon, they've justified their request very well. Things are happening at a higher level, more intensely than they have in the last several years."

Explaining the proposed $25,000 increase in the town's contribution to the chamber, Nacht cited the need for support staff in connection with the new spring Art Walk, a four-week expansion of the farmers market beginning in early May for a 22-week run, a reprise of the fall Art Walk on Sept. 18-19, and the Lenox Winterland, augmented by a Main Street lighting installation inspired by The Mount's "Nightwood Sound and Light Experience" and "Winterlights at Naumkeag" in Stockbridge.

Because of the pandemic's economic impact on local businesses, Nacht predicted a 20 percent loss in annual dues-paying members, with the current renewal level at only half of last year's total by mid-February.

"They just don't have the cash flow now, so, I may see them come in later," she pointed out, noting that several local hotel owners have delayed or canceled marketing commitments.

Nacht also noted that the chamber was $70,000 in debt when she was appointed. That amount, stemming from actions of previous leadership, has been whittled to $14,000, she said.

"It took awhile to gain back the trust that was lost in prior years," she said. "But, I really feel we have momentum, I want to keep riding on that, and things are going to be better this year."

But, Selectman Edward Lane asked for more data, details and specific plans to justify the 20 to 25 percent increase in the town's contribution to the chamber's budget.

"My head is spinning right now," he said.

And Selectman David Roche

said he would have appreciated more advance notice about the requested increase.

The recently created Lenox Cultural District owes much of its success to the chamber's active efforts, said Land Use Director and Town Planner Gwen Miller. "They do so much, and every single project that the Cultural District has done, it's really been the chamber and its staff helping to drive that."

According to hospitality tax revenues reported by the state Department of Revenue, the town's tourism-based economy appears to be less drastically impacted by the pandemic than expected.

During a briefing for the Select Board last month, Chief Administrative Officer Christopher Ketchen reported a "quite remarkable" lodging tax total of $539,000 for the October-to-December 2020 period. Combined with a previous half-million-dollar payment for July through September, that means $1,060,000 in lodging taxes are in the Town Hall till for the first six months of the current fiscal year, more than double the total Ketchen had forecast out of an abundance of caution.

In their own words ...

Additional comments during last Wednesday's Select Board meeting on the Chamber of Commerce's efforts to promote the town:

"The town of Lenox gives an awful lot to the chamber, instead of just writing a check. We do an awful lot for tourism, for getting people into town. We tried to make the town as nice as we could make it so people would come here, we partnered with the chamber, and you have to do your job now. I think we ought to work together at it."

— SELECTMAN EDWARD LANE

"Building a beautiful and welcoming town is the core of it, but it has to also be marketed; you have to let people know what's here to come and to understand what we have in town, to have people see this not just as a vacation spot, but as a potential spot to move to and set roots here. That's what brings in the money so we can continue to keep the town looking beautiful."

— JENNIFER NACHT, Lenox Chamber of Commerce executive director

Biking

They hope to begin construction this spring or summer.

Dan Miraglia, who lives in Pittsfield, isn't on board. He told commissioners he reviewed a master plan for Springside Park and claimed that the bike course conflicts with the area's designation as a passive-use park.

"I feel that the mountain bike course will clearly change and compromise the natural surroundings of the historical nature of the park for passive recreation," he said.

The commission should pause the proposal until in-person public meetings resume, allowing those who aren't used to Zoom to voice their opinions on the project, according to Gene Nadeau, a former parks commissioner and project opponent. Nadeau told The Eagle that he agrees that Springside is meant for passive recreation and believes that there are more suitable locations.

Others also question the location — down an access road behind a row of trees separating the North Street park from the Reid Middle School athletic fields.

Pittsfield native Royal Hartigan has expressed concern about the environmental impacts of the course and mountain biking generally on trails in Springside Park. He urged the commission to set aside the proposal and protect the park as a place for the public to commune with nature in the heart of the city.

"My final plea to you, for now, is that you seriously consider the uniqueness of Springside Park, what it means for a public trust, that nature and life really are as ends in themselves, not for development for some external gain," Hartigan said.

Commissioner Cliff Nilan described Hartigan as a long-time advocate for Springside Park who now lives in Eastern Massachusetts. When the Miller family gave the land for Springside Park, it did so for the purposes of education, Nilan said.

"In some ways, we've gotten away from that," he said. But, he said he doesn't think the course would run afoul of the family's wishes.

If it did, the city wouldn't have seen other additions and capital improvements at the park, like the Little League field, said Jim McGrath, the city's parks and open space manager.

Mark Miller said his father, uncle and grandfather, who granted parkland to the city, would view the proposal as a special interest venture in a public park.

"It's designed for everyone's use with trails for passive recreation, walking your dogs, cross-country skiing, snowshoeing, jogging, kids playing and getting lost," said Miller, who opposes the project but said he was speaking as an individual and not on behalf of his family.

"Not for an interest group that is interested in selling bikes, interested in promoting mountain biking. ... This is an industry, and it should be regarded as that," he said.

But, the city previously has welcomed special interest groups into public parks, citing the example of ballfields and playgrounds, McGrath told The Eagle. The city has reason to be proud of those recreational amenities. He said he believes that the project aligns with the city's efforts to make Pittsfield a regional draw for recreation.

McGee has said the bike skills course would be open to the public at no cost. Groups backing the project, including the Berkshire Mountain Bike Training Series, the Shire Shredders and the New England Mountain Bike Association, would be responsible for funding, maintenance and upkeep.

No Conservation Commission review is needed. The roughly 1-acre site is more than 100 feet away from wetlands and is not home to any protected endangered species, according to McGrath.
